

ANALYTIC GEOMETRY and calculus offers challenge to high school students attending advanced program at El Camino College. Irv Boxer, instructor, makes no distinction between college or high school student when presenting complex course materials.

High School Seniors Get Tough Assignment

Thirty-three high school seniors—many from Torrance—are enrolled in El Camino College's advanced placement program carrying a total of 130 units, H. L. Swanson, coordinator of research, announced this week.

Math is being taken by 27 of the seniors. Three are enrolled in history, two in physics and one each in English, Spanish, German and speech arts.

Since its inception in the fall of 1957, this program of acceleration has given students the opportunity to take college level courses and earn college credit while still in high school.

Including this semester, 115 high school students have taken 156 classes in 41 different subjects and earned 557½ units of college credit.

requirements which allows more time for courses connected with their major field of study after full time college enrollment," Swanson added.

Schedule conflicts seem to be the greatest problem connected with the placement program, according to research material. While enrolled at El Camino, high school students must attend their own school for at least the minimum day.

Overloading schedules has posed a problem in some cases, especially with night students. Transportation for seniors is also a problem.

Almost all of El Camino instructors agree that they are very much in favor of the program, and it should be expanded. Those who have had the seniors in class would welcome more of them.

Classes during the day are preferable for the students teachers indicated and nearly all are definitely against separating the advanced students into classes of their own.

Except in unusual circumstances, seniors do not take classes necessary for high school graduation.

High school grade point average of all the students has been 3.643 on a four-point scale. Their college average was 3.482 or B plus.

Requirements for entrance into the program are that students must have completed all high school prerequisites before enrollment. The course or courses taken should not be used for high school graduation.
